$199 per person, including two nights accommodation, based on double occupancy.

Workshop Description

This is an opportunity to discover techniques to trace your family history. The internet has made it easier than ever for people to gather information about their family histories. However, it is still important to use proper research techniques, to understand the records being consulted, and to flesh out the raw details of a family tree with information about the lives of ancestors. This three-day course stresses the need for research in local history and social history as well as family history, and will help participants understand how to use a wide variety of resources and plan further work.

About your instructor: Dave Obee - www.daveobee.com; daveobee@shaw.ca

Dave is one of the most sought-after speakers at genealogical events in western Canada. His presentations combine approachability and humour with decades of experience researching family and local history. He's given more than 300 presentations since 1997. Dave is co-author of Finding Your Canadian Ancestors: A Beginner's Guide and author of Destination Canada, a book about Canadian immigration records. He's written other genealogical guides dealing with voter's lists, land records, immigration and local history.

Dave is also a respected regional historian and author of Making the News, a book published by the Times Colonist to celebrate 150 years in BC. He's received the top annual award by the BC Historical Federation and an award from Heritage BC for this efforts to make local history sources more accessible.
